During our senior year the school council idea was revived. The Misses Florence Kelly and Eloise Hubbard and Messrs. Harry Cohen and Arthur Rouse represented our class in the council. Upon the suggestion of Miss Stone, the class voted to contribute a book to the Mary Hamer Library, this custom to be repeated each year by the graduating class. The library has been a source of invaluable aid to those in search of material for special topics and reference. The lunch room also comes in for its share of glory, having provided many a feeling of satisfaction in the belt region.

The number of honor pupils this year exceeds that of any other year in the history of the high school. Nearly half of the members of the class are graduating with honors. The class has shown good judgment in voting for simplicity in graduation dress. We may well appreciate the fact that we are graduating at a time when people have come to realize that "clothes do not make the man." In one other respect have we followed the good example of the class of 1915. This year again there will be no distribution of costly photographs. We have tried our best to improve our corner of the world and we hope our earnest efforts will be supported by the future classes.

The date is fast approaching when the class of 1916 will disband. Several members intend to enter college and other schools, but the majority will probably take up one or another form of occupation. In the course of time many of us will become separated. But wherever we may be, we still have the memory of our jolly busy years in Taunton High School.

Class of 1916

HELEN SAUNDERS ALLARD "O".

"I'll speak in a monstrous little voice."

Fair Helen came to us from the East Taunton School and by dint of much struggling and more worrying has managed to survive the General Course. She has decided to study music next year.

Football Banquet Kappa Phi Delta.

IRENE APPLETON "Rene."

"A still and quiet conscience."

A Cohannet graduate is "Rene." She has faithfully pursued the Commercial Course and now thinks her ability will be appreciated in some office.

GILBERT H. ATWOOD "Gibby."

"I can not hide what I am."

"Gibby," a member of the Bay Street delegation, has taken the Technical Course in preparation for Massachusetts Institute of Technology. "Gibby" has indulged in some office work this last year,—perhaps to keep himself out of mischief.

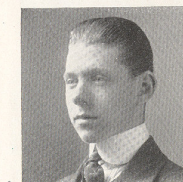

First Sergeant Cadets '16.

Magna Cum Laude.

LAURA M. ATWOOD.

"Now Laura moved among the joyous crowd."

Laura, a quiet student of the Commercial Course, has left school because of ill health.

GRACE ELIZABETH AVILA.

"Sober, steadfast, and demure."

Grace, a graduate of Bay Street, has quietly pursued her studies in the Commercial Course to such an extent that she will endeavor to persuade some business man how absolutely essential she is to his office.

Usher at Class Play Cum Laude.

LAWSON T. BLOOD "Gyp."

"The sunset glow of self-possession."

"Gyp" is one of the strenuous members of the gang from the Weir. He has seasoned his share of the Technical Course with military and athletic flavors. "Gyp" is hoping that the Massachusetts Institute of Technology will overlook his exams.

First Sergeant Cadets '15.

Football '14, '15.

Baseball '15, '16.

ADIN ALLEN BROWN alias, "Skeet."

"Not to know me argues yourselves unknown."

"Skeet" blew in from Cohannet, and with more or less bluffing has concluded his giddy career in the Technical Course. He has frequently been seen to exercise on the cheer leaders' box. "Skeet's" intentions for life after graduation are good, but his future remains to be seen in his course at Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Member "Big Six." Cum Laude.

HELENA MAUDE CABRAL "Cal".

"A quiet conscience makes one so serene."

"Cal", a member of the County Street delegation, has taken the General Course and will enter the Bridgewater Normal School where she will study drawing.

Football Banquet Committee. Cum laude.

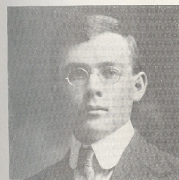

WALTER G. CANHAM.

"Whatever skeptic could inquire for—
For every why he had a wherefore."

The Gilmore School in Raynham gave us "the Professor", who has devoured the subjects not only in the General Course, but, we honestly believe, the entire Mary Hamer Library.

Walter will harvest the fruits of his High School course at Pratt Institute, Brooklyn.

Magna Cum Laude.

EVA DOROTHY CARMODY "Eve".

"She wins our hearts."

"Eve" registered from Bay Street to study the Commercial Course. In her exalted position of Mlle. Paderewski, "Eve" has patiently listened to our musical discords. She has been absent only once during her four years at the school.

Usher Class Play. Kappa Phi Delta.
Member A. A. Cum Laude.

LOUISE REDDING CARPENTER.
"Amiability shines by its own light."

Louise, a Cohannet graduate, has completed her work in the Commercial Course. She intends to be a stenographer.

Member A. A.

Cum laude.

ELZURA H. CHANDLER "Zoo."

"From whence thy learning?"

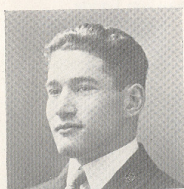

This prodigy drifted in from County Street. She has been one of the studious pupils in the College Course and is now on the way to Wellesley College.

CLINTON COLE "Kinky".

"He's a soldier fit to stand by Caesar and give direction." With his flashing dimple, "Kinky," a Bay Street graduate, has drifted through the mazes of the General Course. After graduation, "Kinky" desires to see life. We trust he will not get too strong a dose of it.

Second Lieutenant '15.
Captain Co. B '16.

JOHN F. COYLE.

"I am slow of study."

John registered from Bay Street. He has been one of the few silent members of the General Course.

FREDERICK J. CURTIN alias "Tony,"
"Kid," "Jeff," "Scoop".

"I wonder at myself."

From the Weir came "Tony" who has scattered excitement wherever he has been. "Tony" has managed to survive the catastrophies of the General Course. He will enter Worcester Polytech. in the fall.

Class Play Committee.

EDNA LILLIAN CURTIS.

"Her ways are ways of pleasantness."

Another business woman is found in Edna, who, having graduated from the Winthrop School, has worked diligently for four years on the perplexing problems of a budding stenographer. She has been absent only once during the four years.

CHARLOTTE LOUISE DAVIS.

"Her treading would not bend a blade of grass."

One of the quiet members of our class is "Char", a Cohannet representative. She has completed the General Course and will continue her study of music.

Cum Laude.

LILLIAN MAE DAVIS.

"I only speak right on."

This talkative miss came from the Weir Grammar School. Her stenographical abilities have been so well developed in the Commercial Course that she, too, will join the ranks of our business women.

Usher Class Play.

Cum laude.

MABEL L. DAVIS.

"A maiden never bold."

Quiet Mabel came from the Cohannet Grammar School. She has taken the General Course and has become one of the honor pupils of the class.

Cum laude.

DOROTHY E. DEAN.

"Of simple tastes and mind content."

"Dot" graduated from the Gilmore School in Raynham. She has taken the Commercial Course and in the future will count herself a successful stenographer.

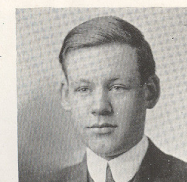

Cum laude.

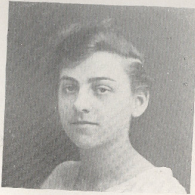

CLARENCE E. DILL "Pickles."

"An honest mind and plain; he must speak truth."

"Pickles" joined us in the fall of 1915 to study the College Course. Although he is reserved, his quiet good humor has made him an agreeable classmate.

BEATRICE L. DUFFY "Beatie."

"My heart is like a singing bird."

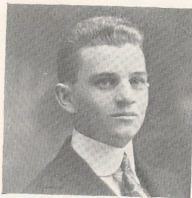

"Beatie" is another graduate of Bay Street who has joined the happy throng of would-be stenographers. She has indulged somewhat in activities other than those of the Commercial Course.

JENNIE E. DUPONT "Jane."

"A shy face is better than a forward heart."

We find another East Taunton delegate in "Jane" who has become so interested in school work that she intends to enter the Bridgewater Normal School.

Cum Laude.

EDMUND J. FITZGERALD "Fitz."

"You come late, yet you come."

"Fitz" registered from the Weir and, when not vainly pursuing his credits in the Technical Course, he has faithfully guarded Mr. Walker's desk. "Fitz" is headed for Tufts Dental College.

Junior Class Play.

MARGARET L. FITZGERALD.

"I am content."

"Marge" escaped with a diploma from Bay Street and with more or less frivolity has indulged in the Commercial Course. She will add her name to those of the successful women.

Member A. A.

Basketball '16.

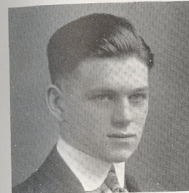

JOSEPH F. GAFFNEY "Butch."

"I want a sofa."

"Butch" decided our class was so far superior to that of 1915 that he deferred his graduation a year to count himself among us. "Butch" has gladly held down the floor in Room I, knowing well that fine statuary is rarely found and greatly appreciated.

Class Play '15.

FAUSTINA GATES.

"What stature is she of? Just as high as my heart."

"Faus" does not yet know what talent she will turn to advantage.

Maid in "She Stoops to Conquer."

President Kappa Phi Delta.

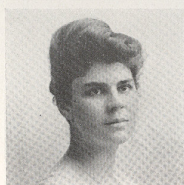

Member of A. A.

DOROTHY ISLER GOODRICH,
Treasurer.

"Thy voice is as sweet as if it took its music from thy face."

"Dot," our class treasurer, is another graduate from Cohannet. When not overwhelmed by the burden of the vast class funds, she has cheerfully wrestled with problems of the College Course. "Dot" has been one of the active members of the class and has faithfully served her many offices. Next year she will take up the Domestic Science Course at Simmons College.

ELLA LOUISE HALLAHAN.

"I am sure care's an enemy to life."

With the rest of the giddy young graduates from Cohannet came "El." She has managed to survive the General Course and will endeavor to decide what course she will pursue when opportunity knocks at her door.

Member A. A.

KATHERYN HARRINGTON

"Oh, but she was gay."

This fluffy young damsel claims she is a graduate of Cohannet. With more or less seriousness she has undertaken the Commercial Course. "K's" witty stage whispers have often brightened the dreary study periods in Room I. Lest frivolity lead her to destruction, next year Katey will take up settlement work in Boston.

EDWARD HAYNES.

Edward came in from the Leonard School. At first he took up the College Course, but later changed to the Commercial.

CARLETON B. HENRY. "Carl."

"He's of stature somewhat low."

"Carl" is another member from Cohannet who undertook the Commercial Course. He has been one of our best athletes and also has a record of perfect attendance for the four years. He has recently taken a position with the Reed & Barton firm of this city.

Football '14, '15.

Member Athletic Association.

"Tom Twist" in "She Stoops to Conquer."

JOHN W. HOLLOWAY. "Lewie."

"I am as sober as a judge."

Cohannet gave us this dignified young person. Though so serious himself, "Lewie" never failed to appreciate the humorous side of the College Course. He will enter Amherst "Aggie" in the fall.

Winner Third Prize—Oral Themes.

ELOISE BARRETT HUBBARD,
Vice-President. "Hubby."

"I never saw the like."

"Hubby" sauntered in from Cohannet and in her spare time has indulged in the mad whirls of the College Course. She is now on the road to Radcliffe College.

FLORENCE M. KELLEY.

"Exceedingly well read."

With her friend "Mae," "Floss" came to us from the Immaculate Conception Parochial School. She belongs to the shining lights of the College Course. "Floss" has proved one of the valuable members on the Girls' Basketball Team. Next year she will study at Boston University.

A. GOLDENA KINGSLEY. "Goldie".
"She gave her tongue no moment's rest."

"Goldie," a graduate from the South school, has taken the Commercial Course. She has been one of those chosen few who linger for the delightful siestas in Room I.

MONICA LOUISE LAWLOR.

"Thinking is but an idle waste of thought."

Monica, a Cohannet graduate, has whiled away the tedious hours in Room I with her merry chatter. She has skipped gaily through the General Course, and with her accumulated knowledge and suitcase, next year, will enter the Normal School.

RAYMOND TENNYSON LINCOLN.
"Zeke." "Link."

"A gentleman that loves to hear himself talk."

"Zeke" walked in from the Leonard School with a fadeless grin which the clouds of the College Course have been unable to efface. "Zeke", famous for his argumentative ability, will go into business.

Sergeant Cadets '14, '15.

Second Lieutenant '15, '16.
Member of A. A.

REBECCA A. MACKENZIE.

"Pretty and apt."

"Reba" is another Cohannet delegate who has bravely attempted the difficulties of a High School Course. In the near future "Reba" will train for a nurse.

Cum Laude.

RHODERICK JOHN MASON.
Secretary. "Rhod," "The Colonel."
"You're such a funny man."

"Rhod," our class secretary, registered from the Weir and has struggled valiantly with the Technical Course. When not preparing for M. I. T., "The Colonel" has occupied his extra time with numerous other activities.

JOHN A. MASTERSON. "Scup."
"Too good to be so."

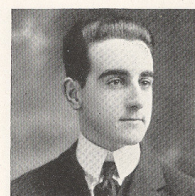

From the Weir Grammar School came "Scup." In the time he has not spent roller-skating, "Scup" has enjoyed the excitements of the Commercial Course. At present he is at the Mount Hope Finishing Company, but he will return to graduate with us.

HAROLD VICTOR McADAM. "Mac."
"Oh, this learning! What a thing it is."

"Mac" graduated from Bay Street and has taken the College Course. He hopes to enter Boston University in the fall.

First Sergeant Co. A. '16. Member A. A.

GEORGE MEADE.

"Away with him! He speaks Latin."

George is a representative of the Weir Grammar School. He has amused himself with the delights of the College Course.

MARJORIE MERRILL.

"For she was full of amiable grace."

Along with the rest of the crowd from Cohannet, came "Marj." She was "Kate Hardcastle," the charming heroine of our class play. "Marj" has taken the College and General Courses and in the fall expects to enter Pratt Institute of Brooklyn, N. Y.

Class Will

With the deepest sympathy for our successors who will blindly stumble along this rocky path to wisdom, we do declare this our official legacy:

To the class of 1917 we leave the unparalleled honor of occupying Room I, seats, floor, and any other means of support as befits the hour and need.

To the classes of 1918 and 1919 we give our worn-out smiles and charms, sincerely hoping they may prove of some use during the critical weeks which precede the monthly reports. Our Faith in the Faculty, also, may be of some advantage to a few individuals.

To the Faculty we leave the unblemished memory of our cheerful, though giddy, career in the school.

The personal bequests are:

- Brown:*—My red, white, and blue geometry string to LeBaron Church '17.
- Blood:*—My ability to arrive at school at 9 and 6/7 minutes past eight to "Ray" Pepler '17.
- Henry:*—My superfluous height to Sayles '17.
- Fitzgerald:*—My front pew to Jackson '17. My knowledge of Solid Geometry to "Ray" Pepler '17.
- Ruth Thornton:*—My spontaneous bursts of laughter to Marjorie Francis '17.
- Alicia Wachenfeld:*—My special license for my Underwood flivver to any Junior who is not in a hurry.
- Elsie White:*—My excessive curls to Grace Hardy '17.
- Curtin:*—My failings to K. Leonard '17.
- Canham:*—My perpetual ennui to H. Wilbur '17.

Haynes:—My green bag to Sayles '17.

Class Prophecy

ADIN ALLEN BROWN

Mine's a hoarse, croaky voice, I know, broken by ten years in this mad-house. Long since, people have lent only unattending ears to my eternal song:

It's a cold room, this north room,
Full of drafts and chill.
I never sleep between these walls
Except against my will.
They tell me that I'm crazy
And when I speak, they taunt.
Believe me, it is rough to live
In a famished squirrel's haunt.

No, they don't listen to my madrigal; they only point to their heads and sigh. My keeper, the man with the baby blue stripes on his sleeve sighed, too, when I escaped a few months ago. He had tied my hands because I bit his ear. He never did appreciate my affection. I got my hands untied and, upon his return, struck him with a garden hoe a sharp blow between the collar button and the ear. I could hear his teeth rattle. I chuckled as I tapped his head to make sure he was sleeping. Seizing my hard earned savings from the stocking under my pillow, I sneaked away thump, thump over the cold grey stones of the hallway. I had got away without a scratch.

In the starless night, I escaped the notice of the guard and tramped along until I became drowsy. Then I sought sleeping quarters with the hens in a coop nearby. A nest made an excellent pillow, and the chirp of a lonely cricket lulled me into deep slumber.

A strange odor awoke me. Sitting upright, I beheld the figure of Rhoderick John Mason industriously spraying the roosts with an atomizer. "Rhod" knew me at once and began immediately a twenty minute discourse on the superiorities of the Buff Orpington. I listened for a few tiresome minutes but, when he began to diagonize the anatomy of a Plymouth Rock, I turned away in disgust.

As "Rhod's" hen science hadn't appeased my appetite, I hit the high spots for a restaurant. Perhaps I didn't do justice to the first good feed I'd had since my confinement! I approached the cashier to pay for my breakfast, and, behind the brass bars, I beheld the smiling face of Florence Kelly.

"This is Forrest Walker's restaurant," she said, refusing the proffered coin. "Every thirteenth customer gets a free lunch."

"That's fine," I answered, as I ordered another piece of gooseberry pie.

Trains are dangerous for escaped convicts, lunatics, and bank cashiers. Hence, I decided to proceed in a jitney. When the driver, forced to wait at a crossing for a freight train, exclaimed, "Will this line stretch out to the crack of doom, I wonder?" I at once recognized the voice of curly Kaplan. At the end of my nickel's worth he refused to take my money, claiming that he owed me something for those OK's in spelling.

For days I traveled on foot. I visited the seashore and chanced upon an immense crowd of people standing on the bank watching three ships in the bay. As the case looked like piracy, I hired a skiff and rowed to the rescue. Behold long John White, a six-foot pirate with strings of shaggy locks, scaling the pilot's ladder, and biting deeply into the wooden blade of a cutlass. Yes, there was a camera. Canham was at his usual practice,—grinding. Snow was the director, and the hideous noise of his ponderous lungs, as he hurled imperative commands at his trembling charges, echoed far over the bay. Some one told me that a captain had once run his ship ashore when he mistook Snow's voice for a fog-horn. Leary, with a prompter's pad, was trying to muzzle Snow, for Miss Merrill, the heroine, was becoming frightened. On the director's craft, Miss Faustina Gates, whose aspirations for stage fame had caused a nervous breakdown, was coaching "Dot" Janson in the fine points of character portrayal. I knew by Miss Janson's faces that she would become a successful actress.

While I was enjoying this Snow scene, I cast my blooming eye on the shore where stood, in amentia, the villain with the blue-striped sleeve. I hastily embarked in my little cruiser and pulled for a safer port in the shape of a wooded island. As a reward of exploration I found an old grey hut hidden among the trees. Seated before the door, humming Tipperary, and peeling potatoes, was "Johnnie" Coyle. John's contempt for humanity had led him to seek isolation, but he was soon to be compelled to leave the island as the duchesse owner was about to take possession. The duchesse, John said, was the very one whom C. B. Wilbur, with his winning ways and flashy ties, had captivated and married. In John's garden were some green violets, planted in prepared sawdust shipped by John Holloway, Vegetable M. D., and famous originator of the seedless fig.

With a new piece of canvas sail rigged on my yacht, I thanked my hermit host and sailed away. I must have slept; for I awoke feeling chilly around the ankles. My boat was leaking so I bailed and bailed and bailed. Not a great way off I saw another rowboat and pulled toward it. Sleeping in the stern with his hat drawn down over his eyes, and a fish line dangling from a nerveless hand, sat "Gyp" Blood. I wanted and needed a dry boat. Perceiving a jug under the rear seat of his boat, I surmised at once the cause of "Gyp's" coma and knew the transfer wouldn't disturb him. I dragged him into the leaky yacht and rowed away in his little scow. I was approaching the shore. In the distance I descried the outline of Falmouth Heights. A tiny speck like a bird seemed to be shooting through the air in my direction. It curved, whirled, and finally swooped through the bottom of my borrowed skiff. As I could swim, I waited for the ill omen to arise to the surface. It was not a bird but a baseball. A shout arose from the shore, and a motor launch came toward me picking up both ball and man. We were soon ashore. Harry Cohen, the pitcher captain of the champion Cottage Club Nine, had made the longest recorded hit in the history of baseball. Harry explained that "Zeke" Lincoln was the proprietor of the Terrace Gables Hotel and that I might room there without fearing the loss of my clothes. "Zeke" had a banquet that night in honor of Cohen's hit, and Sears, an enthusiastic speaker and ambitious bat-carrier of the team, was toastmaster.

The next morning I went bathing. Seeing a pretty lass in swimming costume on the shore, I pretended to sink. She swam boldly out to help me, but one glance at my face was a death blow to her inspiration. She turned away with the remark, "All this trouble for NOTHING. Come, boys, let him drown." I had a fresh rejoinder ready for the saucy young lady when I found out who she was. I swallowed the sarcasm. You can't argue with Miss Duffy. Eleanor Wilbur was staying at "Zeke's" hostelry. I asked her how she kept her youth. "Zeke" answered for her, "Don't you remember that little saying, 'Little drops of water, Little dabs of paint'? I remembered. So did Eleanor, and "Zeke" lost his balance at her approach.

One day I observed across the street, peering through enormous goggles, my old friend, the keeper. I must leave Falmouth! Mrs. Louise "Buttons" Carpenter-Henry and husband invited me to ride to Taunton in their machine. On our way we were hailed at Wareham by two women in washerwoman's apparel and huge pink sun bonnets. One was Evelyn Swift and the other Miss Tripp. "We're picking cranberries this summer," said Evelyn. "It's society's latest fad and wonderful for reducing." Surely Miss Tripp had selected the right occupation.

We reached Taunton just in time to be present at the last call for dinner at the Moorhouse Tea Room,—dinner, but not such as we used to get in the high school lunch room: one pickle on a piece of dry toast, one spoonful of salad, a nickel ice-cream cone for a quarter, and a glass of water. Lois had Ruth Haskins march up and down the aisles between the rows of tables bearing the following announcement on a placard: "We have the welfare of our customers at heart. Overeating means short life. We caution you!" "Buttons" leaned over the table. "Isn't Lo the thoughtful dear?" she whispered.

On my way to the new Taunton railway station, I stopped before the new high school. There was a huge sign at the door announcing that Miss Dorothy Isler Goodrich would speak on the vital question to mothers, "If children thrive on 'Kate' Harrington's Baby Food, why not use hay tea?" I went in. For an example of the hay tea product, "Dot" put Gilbert Atwood, Jr., through a series of worthless questions. I glanced over the heads of the delighted audience to find the smiling visage of Gilbert Atwood, Sr., gazing in fatherly pride at the little prodigy.

The train time was drawing near, and I left the school. At the gate I felt some one grab my arm. I started in fear. The keeper! My fears were foolish, for the cheery, oratorical voice of A. Wanton Rouse greeted me. Rouse, always a man of foresight, had withheld the two acres of land in Raynham, which he had purchased with the proceeds of the 1916 Stylus, until a remarkable offer of Dill, the pickle magnate, led him to sell and make a fortune. In Dill's employ was one Miss Ruth Thornton, who by her sour looks, converted the mild juice of the cucumber into acetic acid. Joe Gaffney was Dill's foreman who superintended the hot air furnaces. All Joe's subordinates were compelled to wear white duck trousers. Rouse and I parted at the station. Getting on the train I was halted by an officious, "Show your ticket!" I beheld in amazement the stern face of Eva Carmody with brass buttons, a "cop" helmet, and a policeman's badge.

On the train in the seat before me was a man with a fine head of hair. The features were those of Syner. I pulled a bit of his hair to see if he would turn around. Then off slid the hair and up stood the bald Syner with the look of an injured kitten. He shook hands after a brief fit of anger and vainly attempted to sell me a bottle of Syner's Safety Salts for Seasickness. I became weary and dropped off to sleep.

At New York I left Syner on the train. Near the entrance to the station, a short man shouted, "Buy Pullia Fillin's Chewing Gum." When I was about to excavate my bank-roll, the fellow said, "Here's one free, Skeet." It was "Scup" Masterson. I afterward learned that Masterson and Meade ran a co-operative concern. "Scup" was a gum merchant, and George, a tooth-puller. Helen Allard came striding down Brad Street with a music roll under her arm. Upon inquiry, I learned that Helen, although her musical debut had never been successfully accomplished, still had ambitions and took weekly lessons in Boston.

Approaching a department store, I found a party of curious people gathered about the window. Upon closer scrutiny, I saw our little "Freddie" Curtin demonstrating a new addition to men's apparel bearing the title perfect form. In another window, Elliott Stillwell was busily dressing the hair on a wax model. The Bijou Theatre bore the sign: Attention! Latest 11th hour attraction. Miss White featuring Edmund Fitzgerald's latest song hit, "Take a Little Tip from Elsie." I entered. Lawrence Vaughan sat asleep in one of the opera chairs and rendered a nasal solo during the entire performance.

Between the acts Miss Goldena Kingsley, in the guise of an usher, passed around to the audience the ever necessary water which few of the martyrs refused. A drink braced me up sufficiently to endure another spasm of the elevating panorama. A sign on the stage announced the Misses Pepler and Philbrick in the latest hair-raising skit, The Dottie Sisters in the Rink or The Tango on Rollers. The performance was hair-raising in one particular. Alice overslid the rink and landed on the foot of a front row "regular." The situation became too clamorous for innocent ears, and I arose and left.

At the peanut stands across the way, three saleswomen were fast becoming matted into one another's hair. One broke free and, seizing a choice peach from her stand, curved it at the struggling pair. The peach cooled their fighting spirits, and the loving embrace was broken. Then began a bitter and scathing denunciation of their several reputations. As I gazed upon them in dignified disapprobation, I was surprised to find three of my old classmates. Miss Orsi was one; Jennie Dupont had sacrificed the fruit; and Helena Cabral was busily wiping away the effects of the combat. I asked the cause of their temporary enmity. Each claimed that one of the others had stolen an apple from her stand. To settle matters, I divided thirty-one cents evenly among them and departed leaving the three hugging one another in propitious rhapsody.

I hiked along until it began to darken. My funds were low, so I must hit upon a plan to secure free board and lodging. I stepped out in front of an auto which came speeding down the street. The driver, "Dopey" Randlett, in one of his peculiar spells of abstraction, did not see me and grazed my arm with his mud guard. I fell purposely unconscious and was carried to the city hospital. Laura Atwood was the nurse assigned to the accident department and attended my case. Dorothy Deane was her assistant in crime. The cordial, which Laura poured down my throat while I feigned sleep, was so good that I remained unconscious for two days. At the end of that time I was dismissed. My ruse had worked.

I decided to fill up while the money lasted. In the Waldorf, I found Miss Wachenfeld polishing the foot-rail at the bar. Before my table in the dining-room, all dolled up in a nobby "tux," stood Burnham Smith. The towel on his arm was so clean that no one would guess it was made from an old baseball shirt. As I was passing out, Lillian Davis approached and brushed the dinner off my coat. I left her tip hand empty. Near the curb Grace Avila was singing Miserere to Edna Curtis's accompaniment on the hurdy-gurdy. I tossed them a bit of change. A stately looking man with a military stride drew near me. It was Earl A. Pierce, a member of the New York State Legislature, owing his position to his incomparable ability of seconding motions and moving adjournments. Pierce knew some of the statesmen well enough to buy their soda checks, he said.

I discovered a boarding house kept by a Mr. McAdam. At my knock, Rebecca McKenzie opened the door. In the hallway Harold McAdam was laying the carpet on the stairs while Reba stood over him with a menacing carpet beater. They both seemed glad to see me and showed me a livable room. Mabel Davis bossed the kitchen. I remember well the amusement of Reba's boarders when I chased a half-baked potato around my plate and finally succeeded in cornering it with a knife and accomplishing its destruction. If the cooking had been edible, I should have lost my appetite, for Ella Hallahan, who served the meals, always filled the dining-room with a strong aroma of Woolworth's best cologne. Across the table sat Hazel Vaughan, the remarkable toe-dancer of Keliher's Ballet, who traveled under the sobriquet, "The Heartbreaker."

At Reba's I learned that my keeper was in New York and hot on my trail. I decided to go to Long Island—not Blackwell's. On the ferry-boat, Doris Leach fed pills to the sea-gulls. She was a specialist on chronic diseases of the water fowl. The suffering birds attained an almost human attitude as they leaned their gasping bills over the rail. Elzura Chandler had in the cabin a parrot which was the object of much jealousy. She had taught the poor thing Latin. "All Gaul is divided into three parts," it muttered as I deigned to address its scholarly mistress. Yes, I thought, there are three distinct classes of human beings: those who are nuts and know it, those who are nuts and don't know it, and the others. Elzura informed me that Edward "Coke" Haynes was grinding ice-cream salt in Chili. "Coke" says that the Chilians don't eat ice-cream in Chili because the weather is too chilly.

On the arrival of our ship at the island, a band of hard laboring minstrels attempted to produce a little harmony from a few dilapidated fish-horns. Their leader, a tall kinky-haired child, called to me, "Wie geht's mein Herr?"

"Your attempt to insinuate that you are a German has fallen utterly flat, Clinton Cole," I civilly answered. "Real Germans don't play a French horn."

In the intense heat of the day I lay down for a quiet nap in the shadow of a huge barn. The ringing of cow bells awoke me. The street was alive with lowing Jerseys. At a well curbed Irene Appleton was pumping water into the milk pail. Such avarice! The farm belonged to Helena Syvertsen who had tried to invent an auto horn to replace the Klaxon. Its tones were so much like the bellow of a calf that she used it to call home the cows. Every evening at milking time, her yard was surrounded by both her own and her neighbor's cattle. Eloise Hubbard, an obnoxious neighbor, was engaged in her usual capacity of making trouble. Her remarkable tennis training enabled her to wield the club gracefully as she beat home the willful kine. Down the road in a pile of dust lay Monica Lawlor. She said in response to my questions, "I was learning to ride horseback when Eloise and her crazy heifers frightened my horse."

That night I sought rest at the Seaside Inn. Before the hearth in the living room sat H. Emma Brown, the noted linguist, talking the sober Gladys Patterson deaf, dumb, and blind. In the library I picked up a book with the heading, "Etta, the Artist Model," written by Etta "Angelica" Singer whose beauty has adorned our magazine covers for a decade. Early in the morning I saw Margaret Fitzgerald playing croquet with the Count von Berkeley. Miss Staples, from the piazza of the Inn, looked on in green-eyed jealousy. Miss Staples herself had been wooed by a grasping count who had stolen both her money and affections and run away with Charlotte Davis.

That night I hit the hay in Helena's barn, for the money in my stocking was all spent. As the first rays of the morning sun streaked the hay, I saw a man creeping slowly near me. At the bottom of the mow, the stripes on his sleeve became distinct. It was Charles Rogers, the keeper, who had come to spoil my fun! Back to this cell, this cold white cell he brought me.

And now all the day long I croon in hopeless abandon:

It's a cold room, this north room,
Full of drafts and chill.
I never sleep between these walls
Except against my will.
They tell me that I'm crazy
And when I speak, they taunt.
Believe me it is rough to live
In a famished squirrel's haunt.

A baby Nuthatch sometimes sings with me and adds his shrill obligato to my croaky bass. There still remains an unchanging truth concerning birds of a feather.

THE FOOTBALL SEASON.

WHEN the call for football candidates was sent out in September, the outlook, to many townspeople, seemed dark. Most of the candidates responding to the call were light men, unacquainted with the game. As soon as this became known, the cry arose,—“Where is your football team this year? The big men are gone.” People began to jeer and to ridicule the players. But in spite of great odds, the boys quickly learned to play together and to get “the jump” on their opponents,—the essential point in football. The team was greatly hampered during the first of the season by the loss of Captain Cohen who, because of business, was unable to play. Notwithstanding this set back, Coach Hunt showed his ability by producing a team that was defeated only once, and then by the strong St. John's Preparatory School. The team, which at the beginning of the season was the object of many petty taunts, won in the end the championship of Southeastern Massachusetts.

Games Won.

Durfee H. S. 6-0
Fall River Tech. 30-0
St. George's 34-9
Durfee H. S. 34-7
Rogers H. S. 13-0

Brockton 7-0

Games Lost.

St. John's 7-12

Games Tied.

Rogers H. S. 6-6

Taunton gained 156 points, to their opponents 41 points.

GIRLS' BASKETBALL.

For the first time in many years there has been a sport for girls in the high school. The girls have been playing basketball. Miss Hunt and Miss Homer have acted as coaches and turned out four excellent teams. Very exciting interclass games have been played, the Juniors winning the championship of the school. The teams have not played other schools.

BASEBALL.

The prospective baseball season is rather bright. Many of last year's regulars are still in school, while most of the new players have come direct from the grammar school league and have had good training. Under the guidance of Captain Pepler and Coach Hunt, Taunton has good prospects for winning again this year the championship of the Bristol County Interscholastic League.

Cadets

CLARENCE M. SYNER

IN the fall of 1912, eighteen boys of the class of 1916 joined the ranks of the Taunton High School Cadets. We marched through the first two years in ordinary step, increasing more or less in efficiency in the manual of arms and in the marching movements. During these two years there were few drills when at least one of our number did not succeed in capturing a medal. Of these prize winners can be spoken only words of the highest praise; for in their drilling they had to compete with upper-classmen who were among the best drilled men in the organization.

At the beginning of our junior year we found that the cadets of our class had dwindled down to ten. To this number, however, there were soon added three who had not failed to see the benefits of military drill and who, even though juniors, had the courage to enter as "rookies". In November, 1914, the juniors who had passed the military examination were promoted to the rank of sergeant. Directly after mid-years, because of the insufficient number of seniors, Major Danforth promoted Cole and Rogers to the rank of lieutenant.

As we entered upon our final term, our boys, again diminished to ten in number, saw that, if we wished a battalion equal in size to that of the preceding year, it would be necessary to carry on an extensive recruiting campaign. After a few days of earnest work we secured even more recruits than the battalion of 1915; in fact, we had the largest battalion in the history of the organization. Immediately we set to work in the hope of presenting it at the Thanksgiving Day social, but we soon decided that we could make a better showing if we waited until the Christmas drill and then put a well-drilled battalion before the public. At the Christmas drill, which, thanks to the loyal support of the public and members of the school, was successful in every way, we gave an exhibition of the battalion parade ceremony. This the guests watched with enthusiasm, expressing much pleasure and satisfaction at our military success. At the February social the cadets gave an exhibition of guard-mounting. For the April drill, there was organized for the first time in several years a color guard. At the junior drill, which was by far our largest drill, the public had a chance to see how efficient the two companies were in the marching movements, the two captains, as usual, competing for the officers' trophy. Aside from introducing new features into the drills, we have also made a change in the officers' uniforms. Cross-guns have been substituted for cross-swords on the collar, and the black braid on the sleeves has been replaced by gold braid.

It used to be the custom to hold drills between the different companies of the cities in Southeastern Massachusetts. There is a large silver cup in the Mary Hamer Memorial Library to show that the Taunton Cadets were the champions of Southeastern Massachusetts. But in the ten or twelve years that have passed since Taunton won that cup, no company has ever challenged the Taunton Cadets. Indeed our battalion hoped that it would be called upon to defend Taunton's name. But, unfortunately no such challenge came. Our cadets remain to-day the unrivaled champions of this part of the state.

Great credit is due our drill master, Major Norris O. Danforth, who has instructed the Taunton Cadets for over twenty-five years. He has helped to make our year so successful that now, when we are about to receive our honorable discharges, we go out confident that the thirtieth year of the organization has been most prosperous.

Class Ode

Words by ELOISE BARRETT HUBBARD
Music by CHARLES B. WILBAR

The halycon years of our high school days,
In the trail of time gliding by,
We weave as a thread in the golden haze
Of fair memory's cloudless sky.
Let wings of endeavor bear up in their flight,
The lingering dreams of our youth,
While bravely we struggle for Justice and Right,
Ever guided by God and His Truth.

As classmates here at the open door
Of the world's great work we now stand;
We've courage and zeal for what lies before,
In the life of this toilsome land.
Then forward and on through the drift of the years,
High be our purpose and aim,
Straight on through the doubts and the hopes and the fears,
Till the goal of success we attain.

The History of T. H. S.

ADIN ALLEN BROWN

VERY town of 4,000 inhabitants shall maintain in addition to the present "common" schools, a high school, kept by a competent master of good morals, who shall give instruction in general history, bookkeeping, surveying, geometry, natural philosophy, chemistry, botany, the civil polity of this commonwealth of the United States, and the Latin language." So reads the act which in 1826 founded high schools in this state. It was passed by the legislature and called for immediate action by the several towns and cities of Massachusetts.

In the call for troops to fight the nation's battles, Taunton has been the first to enter the fray, but she awoke slowly to the needs of education. Although it is known that in 1820 the town confessed to a population of 4,520, it is not until twelve years after the passage of this law that Taunton took active steps to fulfill the provisions of the act. From the oral transmission of events, we find the subject much discussed by Taunton's leading politicians. Traditionally, too, a mild complaint was entered against the town for disregarding this act of the legislature.

Liable to indictment for failure to comply with the statutes, the citizens called a town-meeting to see if money could be raised for the establishment and support of a high school. The selectmen with the co-operation of the school board were voted a committee to place a high school in operation according to law. Mr. Maltry, a member of the committee, was chosen to confer with Mr. Crafts to decide upon what terms he would accept the mastership of the new school. Mr. Crafts became the first principal of the Taunton High School, and the term opened at school No. 11 Oakland, on the first Monday of September in the year 1838. The school committee met at the school house on the first two Saturdays of that month to examine the applicants for entrance. The only opportunities for admission were on the first two Mondays in September.

The requirements for entrance were that the candidate should be not under twelve years of age or over twenty-one, and that he should read and spell well, write a fair hand, be acquainted with Emerson's second part of arithmetic as far as the rule of three, and have a fair knowledge of geography.

On the first of September, 1838, nineteen pupils were admitted; and on the eighth, twenty more. The school continued its course at Oakland until the second of November when it became necessary to vacate No. 11 as the people of that section desired the use of their building. The second term began after a week's recess, at school No. 14, Westminster Street (now Cohannet). Examinations were held as before, and sixty-one pupils were enrolled. As the number of students had become too great for a single teacher, the committee chose Miss Clark as assistant instructor. The duration of Miss Clark's services is unknown.

At the expiration of the second quarter, the school was again moved. This time it took up its new abode in school house No. 21, Squawbetty, and fifty-eight pupils were admitted by examination. The following summer, the ever-moving schoolhouse settled at No. 5, East Weir, and thirty-five more joined the growing school. Mr. Crafts at this time resigned, and Henry G. Steward was examined, approved, and employed to finish out the summer term. The committee then advertised in the Boston papers for a new master to replace permanently Mr. Crafts. There were thirty applicants for the position, and Mr. Justin Field, Jr., was selected.

The fall term opened again in Oakland under the new instructor. The migrations at the end of the first two quarters were the same as in the previous year; namely, fall at Oakland, winter at "the Green," and spring at Squawbetty. This migration was the result of much jealousy from different sections which claimed, when school was held in other sections, that they did not receive advantages in proportion to their taxes. Noisy disputes and debates were held until finally a party was sent to the legislature to secure the repeal of the High School Law. There was no report made by these economic reformers, but on April 6, 1840, the legislature voted that a town might be excused from supporting a high school if it increased the yearly school appropriation 25 per cent. Taunton accepted the alternative and closed the school on the following Friday. In September, Mr. Field made a claim for a full year's salary. Mr. White was selected to defend the suit in behalf of the town. There is no record of a settlement with Mr. Field.

It is said that the roving inclination of the school had no ill effects on the happy pupils who gaily tramped from one end of the city to the other to learn the rudiments of algebra or the conjugation of a Latin verb. The first Taunton High School fell not as a failure but as a victim of that overworked Taunton virtue, Economy.

On May 9, 1848, an amendment was approved by the governor, as follows: All towns with over 4,000 inhabitants shall be again compelled to support a high school and are liable to penalties according to law for failure to do so.

Taunton was once more aroused to action. At a town meeting, a committee consisting of five people was chosen to consider the high school question. They reported that since there was no way out of it; "Mohammed must go to the mountain." The school must be established and held in a definite place or moved quarterly as the people desired. The majority of the committee was in favor of hiring a hall near the center of the town, as the expense of a building would necessarily raise the taxes. There was a public reading of this report, together with one from the minority of the committee. One man from the chosen five declared that the school could not exist under the former poor conditions or in some old hall. He advocated a new, clean, well ventilated school house. This was the first plea to the citizens of Taunton for a new high school building, a plea often repeated but not responded to until 1885.

The town set aside $1,500 for the year's expense of a high school to be held in the rooms of the basement of the old Spring Street Church, the site accepted by the selectmen as satisfactory. There were two recitation rooms, one large study room, and a long gloomy corridor which ran the length of the building. The furnishings of the rooms were necessarily crude. The desks were of rough pine bearing a frugal coat of green paint. Attached to them was a frame which held in position a wooden chair. The blackboards, suspended along the wall, were of pine and painted black. All the fixtures were portable because the rooms were hired by the year. In the north end of the large room, stood a high platform with the teacher's desk. Every Friday, the platform was cleared, and the scholars in turn mounted it to declaim with old-fashioned oratory the eloquence of Patrick Henry or Shakespeare's "Quality of Mercy."

Entrance qualifications were the same as in the first high school. Mr. Ozias Pitkin was employed as principal with a salary of $700. Miss Mary Reed at $400 was his assistant. After the entrance examinations in March 1850, the total number of pupils was 125, 68 girls and 57 boys. Again due to the generosity of the populace, a second assistant was appointed. Miss Amelia Sproat was chosen. She resigned in April, 1852, and was replaced by Miss Emeline Lothrop. From that time up to its removal to city hall in September, 1854, the school kept the same corps of teachers.

The work of both the pupils and teachers of the Spring Street School was highly recommended by the school committee of that period. Results were obtained in spite of disadvantages. The old church building was fast becoming passé. During the cold weather, even the warmest blooded youngster needed a muffler to keep warm in the school room. Cold north winds rattled the loose doors which from old age had shrunk from their casements. When a window was opened, the cold became unbearable, and a lack of ventilation necessarily resulted.

In the next annual report of the school board was a second plea for a new school house. "A first class, permanent, and convenient edifice is needed if this institution is to be perpetuated among us," was the slogan of the school's supporters. Mr. Pitkin, the principal, almost decided to accept an offer from the Chelsea School Board but was persuaded to remain with an increase of $300 yearly salary.

In the school report the following term, the people were further informed that the most urgent need of the high school was better accommodations. It read, "The time has come, we think, when suitable building should be furnished worthy of the reputation of the school and the standing of the town. The present conditions have never been either convenient or healthful." It was recommended that a new school be erected in some central location.

Advised by some one in authority to build a second story on the Town Hall, the town complied in 1854. The poorly lighted, echoing, unventilated, and unheated upper story was used for the class-room. Only two examinations for entrance were held each year, and the standard was raised for the purpose of increasing the efficiency of the lower schools.

It had been the custom for the students to accept such subjects as were presented without question as to their value, and to continue the curriculum step by step, year by year, until they had reached the working age or to that period where the school could enlighten them no further. A timely suggestion was made that courses be planned which the pupil might follow to some definite end. However, this idea was not put into practical working order until ten years later. Mr. Pitkin was finally induced to accept the call to Chelsea, and soon after the opening of the school at the town hall, Mr. Gage succeeded him as master. In February, 1855, the services of a second assistant became unnecessary, and Miss Lothrop was dismissed. The committee's report of the first year in the new building was as follows: "Although a large amount was appropriated for this suite of rooms, there was no furniture in them with the exception of the desks of the teachers and the scholars. There were no blinds to shade the intense light from the white walls, no means of heating except by two furnaces, the greatest capacity of which so far as tested this winter is that of immense consumption of fuel."

New stoves and shutters were granted, but, in granting, the committee overdraw the usual yearly appropriation. Even with these new accessories, the conditions in cold weather were so severe as to force the closing of the school on the coldest days. Owing to something in the construction of the building, even a slight noise caused multiple echoes. It was manifestly impossible for the school to progress under such disadvantages. Teachers were leaving because they were offered better schools and higher wages elsewhere. In April, Mr. John Ruggles succeeded Mr. Gage as principal and ably conducted the school to the close of the year, at the end of which he returned to Brighton. In March, 1856, the committee, after due deliberation, chose Mr. William E. Fuller to fill the position. Mr. Fuller had previously taught in the Taunton schools, and the committee were aware of their good fortune in securing his services.

Mr. Fuller's first year marked a greater progress in excellence of discipline and improvement of classes than in any previous year. Mr. C. W. Thrasher of Dartmouth served a year under Mr. Fuller, as second assistant. At the end of his term of service, Miss Sallic Fox became second assistant until February, 1858, when, owing to the increase in the number of pupils, a sub-master, Mr. Charles P. Goreley, was chosen. In 1860, Miss Reed, who had taught eighteen years, resigned, and Miss Luthera H. Leach was elected to fill the vacancy. In November of the same year, Mr. Fuller resigned after five years of successful mastership. He left the school an established and popular institution, the result of his conscientious work. Silas D. Presbrey, a Harvard graduate, accepted the leadership of the school and successfully carried out the principles of his predecessor. Mr. Presbrey's term of office was during the period of the Civil War. Many of the boys were instructed in military affairs, and some of them even became officers in the country's service. The school now numbered 129 pupils, the percentage of attendance for the first year being 98. The scholars and teachers attempted to beautify the old bare walls of the room using the proceeds from two well patronized public exhibitions. They purchased pictures and statuary which lent their refining influence until the school's removal.

Up to the time of Mr. Presbrey's mastership, the courses had been elective for those not going to college. The pupils preparing for higher institutions of learning generally accomplished their work in four years. The others remained in school as long as they desired. In 1862, graded courses of study were adopted which extended over a period of four years at the end of which the scholar was presented with a diploma. The members of the school in 1862 were divided into the second, third, and fourth classes. There was no first class until the next year. One examination was held for entrance each year.

In July, 1863, Mr. Presbrey resigned, and Mr. Goreley was advanced to the position of principal. John P. Swinerton was made new sub-master. Mr. Goreley graduated the first three classes from the Taunton High School. At the end of each school year, a formal graduation was held when the pupils received diplomas. This was the inauguration of our present graduation ceremony. From the proceeds of entertainments, the school was able to buy a piano which was indeed a luxury.

Mr. Laban S. Warren was Mr. Goreley's successor but, owing to ill health, he soon resigned his position to Mr. Swinerton, the second sub-master to become principal. Mr. Swinerton began a ten year's service and signed the diplomas of eleven graduating classes. Many sub-masters served under him, among whom were Dr. Waterman afterward superintendent of schools; and Clarence Boyden, later assistant principal of the present school, principal of Weir and Cohannet Schools, and superintendent of schools. Miss Mary Hamer was made second woman assistant in February, 1874.

The erection of the Leonard block was the next detriment to the school's progress as all the light from that side of the school room was shut off by the new block. There was an attempt made to provide sufficient light by the means of gas burners. This proved unsatisfactory, and finally it became necessary to cut four immense sky-lights in the roof of the building. Many of the pupils of that time claim that their eyes were seriously injured by the light. The apparatus, which was used in natural philosophy and was worn and old, was replaced by a new and fine set of laboratory materials.

In 1871, Dr. Waterman, then superintendent of schools, introduced the system of opening the high school to those who had received a grammar school diploma. By 1876 the school was so large that a number of the scholars had to be accommodated in the hall of the Weir School. Mr. Swinerton resigned in 1877, and Mr. Charles S. Moore took his place. In comment on the school under Mr. Swinerton the committee report, "Harmony and progress are marked in the school."

Mr. Moore had been principal but a short time when Mr. Leonard resigned, and Mr. Ansel O. Burt took his position as sub-master. Miss Mary Hamer was advanced to first assistant and Miss Maria Baylies replaced Miss Leach. Late in 1885, another assistant was chosen.

It had been the custom of the school to hold two daily sessions, but due to the poor lighting facilities, Mr. Moore established a one session system which proved so successful that it has been retained to this day. In July Mr. Moore resigned, and Mr. Bartlett of Bristol Academy succeeded him. The work under Mr. Moore was marked by an advance in the classical department.

The general public were fast becoming aware that better accommodations for their high school were absolutely necessary and that the school could exist no longer under the poor prevailing conditions. The temporary accommodations which had been occupied for thirty years were outgrown. Even as early as 1871 there had been demands for a new schoolhouse; the city hall rooms had never been adequate. The poor conditions as well as the offered increase in salary were inducing our teachers to accept calls from other cities. Finally in May, 1883, the committee was authorized to buy the King-Richmond estate on the corner of Washington and North Pleasant Streets. The contract for the new building was awarded Mr. James Bassett of Taunton and the work was at once begun.

In June, 1885, the completed building was accepted by the city of Taunton. The following is a description of the new school from the report of 1885: "The house is of brick with two stories and a tower. It contains two large department rooms and four recitation rooms provided with chairs and slated blackboards. There is a well fitted chemical laboratory in the basement in which there are also water closets, and rooms used for storage and other purposes. The upper story contains a large hall (fitted with a stage) and two rooms each of the size of the lower recitation rooms, used in winter by the evening drawing schools. The tower contains an observatory and a good telescope. The ventilation of the building is poor and the roof leaks badly. It is heated by steam and located at the corner of Washington and North Pleasant Streets. It was erected in 1884."

The first class entered in September, 1885, with John P. Swinerton again in the chair of the principal. In 1888, the committee deemed it advisable to hold a normal class for post-graduates intending to take up the vocation of teaching, and the following year, Mr. Frank Kendall was chosen for the purpose of conducting a class in normal training. The next year, however, he was called to Boston, and the post-graduate normal course was abandoned.

A definite course of study for the entire school was introduced in 1888. The general studies were: Manners and morals, spelling, penmanship, reading, English, composition, history, physical geography, physiology, and declamation. Each student was obliged to take three subjects beside the general studies. The pupils preparing for college took subjects necessary for admission. Military science became a regular part of the course, and the organization of the Taunton High School Cadets was formed with Col. A. B. Hodges as instructor. In 1891, Major Norris O. Danforth succeeded Col. Hodges as military instructor. In 1889, Mr. Fred W. Howes became the instructor of music in our public schools. The school, now numbering 248 pupils, had outgrown its new quarters. The rooms were so crowded that Miss Hamer was obliged to conduct a class in the assembly hall. Mr. D. G. Miller filled the vacancy of the retired Mr. Burt, and three other new teachers were introduced in 1895 to ease the burden of the overworked faculty. The next year a census of the teaching force in the city showed 75 per cent. of the teachers employed in Taunton schools to be graduates of the Taunton High School.

The school at this time enjoyed an excellent reputation throughout the state.

In a report the superintendent of schools stated that the chemical and physical laboratories which were unfortunately placed in the basement enabled, either by accident or mischievous design, odious gases to be readily spread all over the building. The school now had outgrown its accommodations, but the over conservative populace was slow in acting upon a plan for a new building. Again at this time came the question of special courses. A plea in the report of 1897 stated the needs and desires of the school and also the hope that an enlargement might not only be begun but completed. No good work could be done when a teacher has 150 pupils in his room. The Latin teacher was especially handicapped with pupils massed in front of her and on her right and left.

In 1899 was begun the long-sought-for addition which became ready for occupancy the middle of the following year. There were well-equipped laboratories, and the school was able to use the hall again for general exercises and music. Mr. Swinerton, who had been connected with the school for 30 years, was compelled to resign on account of failing health. There are nothing but words of commendation for his faithful service to the school.

Mr. Miller succeeded Mr. Swinerton as principal. In 1902, a moderate standard of scholarship and of deportment was required for those who aspired to higher offices in the cadet company. The year was also marked by more extensive work in English. Demands were made as early as 1905 for some means by which pupils might be provided with lunch at recess. In 1906, an evening high school was introduced and the hours for drawing were increased. The public was beginning to show its appreciation of the high school.

In the report of 1907, a commercial course was suggested. Many favored the introduction of such a department. In that year the evening high school was given up because of the failure of the people to take advantage of the school. By 1909, a dropping off of the number of pupils enrolled was apparent, a shrinkage due partly to the lack of a commercial course. With the resignation of Principal Miller in 1910 the school lost a teacher who had always stood for fine scholarship.

Mr. Fred U. Ward was elected successor to the principalship. In his first report he stated that the school did not show the crowded conditions prevalent in many of the high schools, and he expressed a regret that more of the children of Taunton did not take advantage of a high school education. His administration is marked with rapid progress. Courses were revised and the point system of marking was introduced. The commercial department was installed and placed in the hands of efficient instructors. Household economics became part of the curriculum, and a room in the basement was equipped for the cooking division. A library in memory of Miss Mary Hamer was begun in 1912 and was ready for use by the students the next year. Owing to the kindness of the Woman's Club 1912 saw the much-sought-for lunch room introduced. A school council of several members of the school was formed for the purpose of a better understanding between the student body and the faculty. The A. A. joined the Bristol County Inter-scholastic Baseball League, and the Taunton team won the championship for that year.

Instead of following the usual custom of junior classes, that of giving a light sketch and dance at the annual Junior Class Play, the Class of 1915 presented Shakespeare's "Taming of the Shrew", the Class of 1916 following the next year with Goldsmith's "She Stoops to Conquer".

The introduction of the eighth grade system in the lower schools has led to an increasing enrollment in the high school. Eighty freshmen are housed in the North Pleasant School, and the high school is crowded to its fullest extent. New teachers have been employed, but more room and more teachers are necessary. Plans are being drawn up which provide for these necessities.

Such is the history of the Taunton High School from its beginning in 1838 to the present date. Like every worthy institution the school has had its seasons of discouragement, rising to its present high grade only through hard work and sturdy endeavor. It is hoped that soon Taunton will have a remodelled high school with more commodious quarters and up-to-date equipment to which future graduates can point with pride, deeming it an honor to be numbered among the loyal sons and daughters of their beloved Alma Mater. This year the school council has again been organized for the purpose of bringing the students and the Faculty in closer relationship that everything possible may be accomplished for the betterment of the entire school. On May 9, 1916, the council was given the privilege of going to visit modern schools. The New Bedford and Brockton High Schools were the schools chosen for the visits and general inspection.

So close a fellowship between student and instructor has been effected by the weekly convention of the representatives of the school body, that it is to be hoped that the school council will continue to be an established organization of the Taunton High School.
